

Dwayne A. Elias

Scientist, Biosciences Division

Oak Ridge National Laboratory

Dwayne Elias is a staff scientist with the Microbial Ecology and Physiology group in the Biosciences Division. Elias has a PhD from the University of Oklahoma – Norman, an MS in Microbiology from the University of Manitoba – Winnipeg, and a BS in Biology, also from the University of Manitoba.

Prior to coming to ORNL in 2009, he was an Assistant Research Professor at the University of Missouri-Columbia in the Department of Biochemistry. Elias is an UT/ORNL Joint Faculty member in the Biochemistry Cellular and Molecular Biology Department at the University of Tennessee. His primary research interests focus on microbial physiology and ecology. Examples include Biochemical pathway elucidation and characterization within bacteria, systems biology studies, elucidation of the function of hypothetical genes, and microbial interactions.
